Poor Economics

Abhijit Banerjee - 2012-03-27

The winners of the Nobel Prize in Economics upend the most common assumptions about how economics works in the gripping and disturbing portrait of how poor people actually live. Why do poor families choose not to save? Why do they eat rice even on days when they can buy bread? Why do they spend their money on alcohol and cigarettes instead of food? How do the poor decide whether to spend money on health care? Why do some poor people save and others don’t? Why do some people escape poverty and others don’t? This is the globe’s first book to bring together the latest research on how the poor make decisions in their daily lives. Abhijit Banerjee and Esther Duflo, two award-winning MIT professors, answer these questions based on years of field research from around the world. Called "marvelous, rewarding" by the Wall Street Journal, the book offers a radical rethinking of the economics of poverty and an intimate view of life on 99 cents a day. Poor Economics is an essential contribution to the study of economics and a must-read for those interested in poverty around the world.
